

ANSWER TO THE WHIG SONG, "COME VOTE FOR THE PATRIOT CLAY."

What! vote for him upon whose brow Shame's ever burning brand shall lie?
He who once sold his country's rights To foul misdeeds—to gain thereby?

He vote for him whose bloody hands Yet reek with murdered Gilley's gore—Whose every act 's so linked with crime, E'en guilt might curse on him pour?

We vote for him who could his arm 'Gainst Randolph's honored form upraise, With dastard, foul, vindictive hate!
Is this the subject of your praise?

We vote for him who even now, When no more young, but sore and gray, His country's laws in bonds must bind, His vengeful, murderous hand to stay!

We vote for him who once could taunt His fellow freemen with the cry—Of "slaves assuredly we must have;
If they're not black, then white we'll try!"

No! hear to him the answer back, Insulted, taunted, freemen give—
That no "Dictator" yet we want That free awhile, we yet would live.

Go tell him freedom yet hath charms, Nor ever basely will we kneel To Marat of a mountain clan, While Virtue lives or hearts can feel.

From the Citizen Soldier.
"THE MAN OF THE HERMITAGE." BY GEORGE LIPFARD, ESQ.

The morning sky was glowing with The soft warmth of the autumn dawn; Far, far over head arches the azure Dome of the heavens, and far, far around Sweeps the gorgeous prospect of Wood and field, uprisings and green Meadow, the wood clothed with rainbow hues, the hill all dusky brown, While the long grass of the meadow Glitters with the first white frost of autumn.

Our way has lain along yonder green Meadow, our footsteps crisscrossing the grass at every step—come let us rest ourselves on yonder stump of giant oak; let us look forth upon the sky from the interval between the shrubs yet green with summer, and the chestnut tree, heavy with fruit, its long limbs sweeping across our vision, while the broad healthy leaves quiver to and fro, to the impulse of the momentary breeze.

Hark! A footstep.
A bold and determined footstep, yet an ancient man emerges into view, and stands before the interval of shrubbery and chestnut trees, between our view and the red dawn of the uprising sun.

Tall, straight and erect as the red hunter of the forest in figure, with the gift of nature's own moulded kings, the quiet majesty of command in every gesture of his limbs, he gazes to the sky and the blush of dawn falls softly over his noble face, the lofty massive brow with the snow white hair, rising in masses around its thoughtful outline, the keen piercing eye, shadowed by the grey brows, the determined nose, the firm mouth with compressed lips, the high cheeks, and bold prominent chest and the furrowed wrinkles of his visage are crimsoned by the kiss of the up-rising sun.

This is a strange old man, and he walks abroad at an early hour. Who is the stranger?

Look again he still gages on the heavens. "Dye mark his eye! Dye mark how it dilates, flashes, and—by my soul—it burns! Mighty thoughts cross the old man's soul at this hour, swelled memories fill his aged heart—eighty years upon him with all the story of the world's ways and wrongs, yet the ancient stranger hath blood warm in his veins, and his soul is yet young, fresh as the swaying leaf of the autumnal chestnut tree.

Tell us! What are the mighty thoughts that cross his brain? Are they thoughts of God?—Galm dreams of good old age, looking back to well spent years? Mighty reveries of former glories, the scene where millions applaud, where the laurel falls freshly on the brow of the conqueror, or the crowded temple where the old fire-god Eloquence stirs men's hearts to higher purposes and glorious deeds, or the chair of office, shaken to and fro by the rockings of the popular earthquake, or does he dream of the quiet solitude of the eternal grave?

Who is the stranger standing calmly and erect between us and the light of the up-rising sun, with the red blush of the dawn falling over his wrinkled face and snowy hair?

Not a farmer in all this neighboring land but has seen him thus traversing the field at early dawn, wrapt in absorbing thought—not a ploughboy urging the sleek horse along the furrow in the calmness of purple twilight but has looked over his shoulder and beheld the tall stranger striding slowly on along the verge of yonder hedge, his calm face upturned to the sky, while his eye dilated and flashed with silent yet mighty thought?

Who is the stranger?
It is the happy Sabbath morn, and passing through the wicket gate, built on the old stone wall, we enter the rustic grave yard and stand before the country church, rising grey and massive into the clear sky, with the old door and window sills eaten by decay, clumps of green moss on the roof, the swallows twittering around the ancient steeple, with the sunshine glimmering over the cracked bell and rusty vane.

We enter, we seat ourselves on the steps of the altar, for the church is crowded; we listen to the voice of the ancient preacher, whose message is of life and peace to the minds of men from the Lord Jesus, the crucified, the risen, the mediatorial.

Who comes here? As I live, 'tis our ancient friend, who stood between our vision and the dawn not long ago.

Aye, he comes slowly along the aisle, his white hair blackened by crape, in one hand, his cane in the other, while every eye beholds his lofty brow, the snowy hair and the commanding countenance, seamed by the wrinkles of age.

Silently he takes his seat—all give way to his presence—silently he listens to the word of God—silently the sabbath morning wears away.

Who is this ancient man?

A new scene!
Here crowding around the banisters of the circular railing in front of the pulpit, kneeling on the steps of the alter, bowing the heads in silent awe, come young and old, rich and poor, come red lipped youth, blooming maid-hood, mature matronhood, stern manhood and silver haired age.

In the midst stands the preacher, holding aloft the cup and bread of God, speaking of the mystic meaning of those divine emblems as he extends the sacred food to the lips of age, or bestows the wine of life on the silent adoration of youth.

And here kneeling with a rosy-cheeked maiden on one side, and an aged veteran of the cross on the other, he silently bows the stranger, his long white hairs hiding his muscular hands trembling over his visage as he lowers his head in voiceless prayer; here he prays, that ancient man; he extends his hand, reaches the cup and bread of God, and that voice so full, so bold in its slightest tone, trembles with the syllables of the Redeemer's name, mur-muringly speaks the word of hope, "Jesus!"

Who is the stranger that stood between us and the red dawn a few moments ago, that now bows, trembles while he eats the bread and drinks the wine of God?

Who is this ancient man with the wrinkled face and snowy hair?

Come back with me twenty eight years through the pathway of time, come back with me to a strange scene where our question may find its answer.

A wide city, with temples, mansions and domes, wrapt in a heavy pall of smoke, groups of pale faced citizens standing at the corners of the streets, the silence of the night resting on the place, in broad day, while the thunder of the distant cannon breaks on the air.

Now ask who is the stranger.

Ask the mother, secreting her babe in the dim nooks of her home, on whom next to God, she relies for protection in this dread hour, when the rude hand of British ravage seems already thrust before her eyes, ask the aged father, with his blooming and dark haired daughter kneeling at his feet in speechless alarm, while she clasps his knees ask the grey haired man; who shall stay the path of the red coat hireling with the cry of "Beauty and Booty," who shall rescue the pure girl from the polluted grasp of the ravisher.

The mother, the father, speak one name of hope, one name of salvation!
People of the wide city of the south, trembling while the thunder of British cannon is at your gates, clustering at your street corners in fear, hiding yourselves in the nooks and chambers of your proud mansions, your brothers your fathers, on to the march of death without the city walls in this moment of death and horror!

Again that name of glory breaks on your ears. Bold Backwoodsman of the west speeding through flames and smoke, speeding over the dead corpses of your red coat foes, tell us, who is yon tall warrior mounted on the white war-horse, pointing his sword around to the death he dares fearless in the hour of horror and dismay, while round his horse's feet scatters the shot and rains the death hail!

The question passes from our lips and yet again—that name of glory comes echoing through the gloom of battle!

Who is the stranger of the autumnal meadow, who is the communicant of the church of God; who is the salvation of the fair city of the south, the hope of woman and the stay of man, the leader of the backwoodsman and the terror of the British hirelings?

On the pillar of our country's history side by side with the immortal names of Washington, Hancock, Adams, and Jefferson, side by side with Wayne, Lee and Gates, with Madison and Marshall an answer is recorded in these letters of gold—the name—ANDREW JACK-SON.

Go down to your grave, oh, mighty hero; go down to your resting place of glory, while in your ear rings the fame of a whole world; on your venerable head of snow falls the sunshine of God's own presence; go down to your grave, full of years, burdened with blessings! May the hand that would fling the dart of calumny on your white hairs be palsied. May the tongue that would assail your closing brows with slander or falsehood be speechless forever!

Honored by men, sanctified by history, smiled on by God, slowly and quietly go down to your grave of glory, mighty man of the Hermitage, while a whole nation shall wait for the death of the hero, the immortal—ANDREW JACKSON.

THE AGRICULTURIST.

AGRICULTURE AND ITS ADVANTAGES.
Of the various occupations and professions which have engaged the attention of mankind there is none that seems to be so pre-eminently useful, so honorable, in short so compatible with all our interests, as the cultivation of the earth. There is none which has so many resources within itself, or which can furnish for all our necessary wants. Food, raiment and luxuries innumerable, are the fruits of the farmer's labor and care: and in their train follow health, happiness, and independence.

And in view of these facts, for facts they are, are we not led to wonder that so many of our young men are placed behind the counter, to learn the arts and the mysteries of the scales and yard stick, to deprive themselves of the bloom and freshness of youth, and bring early and deep furrows of care and anxiety on their brows, by the difficulties and perplexities attending the prosecution of mercantile pursuits, when so many, and so strong inducements are held out for them to engage in that profession which was the earliest employment of man, and which as the light of science is spread abroad, and improvements are made in the art, is becoming more interesting, more profitable; and at the same time less laborious.

With what different feelings does the farmer and the merchant leave their pillows in the morning! The one buoyant with health and spirits goes forth with the first dawn of day to his cheerful labors in the field, while the other, after a restless and perhaps sleepless night walks in a sober mood to his counting room anticipating with fearful forebodings the insolvency of his customers, or the ill success of a voyage.

With what honest pride and heartfelt satisfaction does the farmer look at his luxuriant fields, his richly laden orchards and his growing flocks, with the happy assurance that with every returning season his substance is increasing, that he is above want, and far from feeling the fluctuation of mer-chantize, or the embarrassments of trade.

Who, that has seen the hale and vigorous ploughman, whistling along as he turns up the furrow, and has not sighed for the joys of pastoral life? Or, who has enjoyed the privilege of witnessing the internal arrangements of a thrifty farmer's establishment, and observed the care and attention evinced in all her domestic economy by his industrious and frugal wife, and has not coveted the happiness and independence of the farmer? Much as the wealth and prosperity of a nation may be advanced and promoted by its commerce and manufactures, still we are constrained to look upon agriculture as its source and foundation. It is absolutely necessary to our existence; for let men pursue what other business they may, they are still dependent on the farmer for what they eat, drink and wear.

And, suppose the farmer, by way of relaxation, occasionally deviates from his regular routine of duties, and engages a little in horticulture, or the cultivation of the choicer kinds of fruit, will he not be repaid a thousand times for the time and labor bestowed on a few trees, vines or shrubs?

And further, will not the appearance of his house and "front door-yard" be immensely improved? himself and family enjoy a large amount of pleasure and gratification, not to speak of the frequent lessons of neatness and order which his children would learn by the cultivation of a few varieties of flowers. And will not these silent monitors which so beautifully remind us that "The hand that made them is divine," also have a moral tendency and teach us to look

"Through nature up to nature's God?"

MOURNFUL MISTAKE.

Twice on a rainy day like this,
When Harry, full of rapturous bliss, (For he had just been married), Leaving the church, said "good bye all,"
And with his young bride fair and tall, He for the carriage tarried.

Now up it hies,
When Harry sighs, (Damp from the pouring water),
"I hope we'll have a little fun;"
"Dearest," lisped out the blushing one, "I'd rather have a daughter!"

In London they sell rats with artificial tails attached; for grey squirrels.
[Ex. paper.
That's not half so bad as to stick the name of "Whig" to the tail of an old federalist, and attempt to pass him for a democrat.

It has been decided that calling a man "small potatoes," is actionable.
